

Dear Debra Bell/ others I hope you all are keeping well, you said please share your experiences but if you look at yours you will see mine, reading your story in the evening standard dated 21st April 2008, has really lifted some of the weight off my shoulders, because I blamed myself for my son situation and kept thinking where, what, how, why, when the only difference is that I am living in England for the past twenty two years and my son is living in Jamaica. He is twenty three years old, went to the most elite schools, passed his 11+ when he was nine and a half years old, he was class prefect, cricket captain, lives in a home that produced 1 nurse, 2 teachers, 1 police inspector- (his dad) he was really going places! Although I lived in England I travelled to Jamaica twice per year just to see he was ok, never picked up any clues that he was messing with cannabis tried everything to help him, nothing works- but you know what! am not giving up on him I am going out there in three months time and if he goes to toilet am following him, I know few people that has been affected by cannabis(cancer) three died, two is still in very bad state, I will take him to visit them, if that does move him then probably I will have to back off for a while, only God can help us, I will continue to pray, stay Blessed
