

Not trying to be a wise guy, just saying. How can you blame a drug for how people use and abuse it? You don't blame a wife for wife abuse, so why blame a drug for drug abuse? cannabis can be a very useful drug with hundreds of positive uses but people like you blame it for all sorts of problems like not raising your son to respect cannabis, and so he goes off and abuses it and (like with most drugs legal and illegal) becomes addicted. and well done generalising even more with the age selection, I'm 17 and going through college successfully, I do use cannabis once every few weeks (probably because I was taught the real facts from an early age) as a type of temporary relaxation when work becomes too stressful...(so arrest me for 2 years losing my chances of success!). I've found whilst using cannabis my interest in human psychology, philosophy and astrology had increased making me feel much more comfortable in the world I live in. I believe you gain nothing through keeping it illegal

All you maintain in society is a black market, crime, gangs and children accessing it. if it was legalised (not moved to a class b) it would be properly manufactured and distributed as a safer drug and not made into higher THC containing cannabis containing less CBD. I think you need to look at the facts of both sides of the story before you start trying to spread your propaganda to the masses. Look into the history of cannabis and learn some respect for it and compare it to other drugs being given to millions of people in Britain everyday. (Alcohol comes to mind) thank you for your time. Although I'm sure this will be ignored as it may be a threat to this whole site.
